Sunday, October 20, 2013 estebanic, rock 20 comments Black Chicken (La poule noire) - also known by its English name: Black Pullet - is a banned book written in the late 18th century by a French officer who served in the Napoleonic Wars. His name remains a mystery. Black chicken considers three main versions of the occult: rings, mascots and vampire appeals. The book begins unexpectedly as a narrative play. It tells the story of a French soldier during the occupation of Egypt. His platoon was ambushed and destroyed by a Bedouin game. Our main character manages to escape, and he becomes the only survivor in this skirmish. Already hidden in the Giza area, the soldier comes into contact with an elderly Turk who takes him to a secret chamber under the pyramids; right on the site where, years later, G.P. Lovecraft will place a hidden camera position in the horror story Under the Pyramids, originally composed for Harry Houdini. In the bowels of this pyramidal mole soldiers discover the remains of the Great Library of Ptolemy. Until now, Black Chicken is part of the fiction, interesting but engaging. However, the cursed book soon takes an unexpected turn. Gradually, he abandons his narrative nature and turns into a grimoir, which tells about the secrets of making magic rings and mascots with supernatural properties. Black Chicken offers strange formulas for making rings that make its bearer invisible, something that undoubtedly alarms JR R Tolkien; mascots who fall in love with the most indifferent women and others who make even the dead fertile. These are the wonders offered by the book. But Black Chicken hides the secret Major, and that connects him directly to vampires. From now on it is no ordinary call, and it is not called protating a Victorian vampire. The black chicken provides a ritual of conscription to devour the vampire from the vortex of the astral plane and make him obey us. A series of signs should be drawn on a piece of black silk, and then tinctures on the surface of a copper coin, or on a copper object that reproduces the shape of the coin. The operation, announced by The Black Hen, is due to take place on Saturday before dawn. Once completed we have to read aloud the strange characters that we have just printed: NADES, SURADIS, MANINER. If we believe in the caustic rites of Black Chicken - what we suffer because of the bucolic nature - and the making of the mascot was correct, we will see that from a thick, milky couple, a representative of the vampire race will emerge from the unflaked sands: Afrit, disembodied but diligent creature. Once the vampire has acquired some consistency we have to challenge him as follows: SADER, PROSTAS, SOLASTER. Since then, promises Black Chicken, the vampire will be obliged to twist the heart and desires of anyone who the judge tells him. Those who doubt their resilience in the presence of a real vampire, the book also offers us a formula to cancel the rite. In the case of guilty regrets, it must be said: MAMMES, Laher. There are those who went even further, such as Jack Methodius, the first pirate editor of The Black Hen, who performed all the steps described above and then recounted his experience in the prologue of the second edition. Methodier claims to have seen the appearance of a terrible vampire, a black essence deformed, matched by factions wrapped in his own dark wings. The vampire not only gave up on The Whip's whiplash desires, giving him the favor of beautiful women, but also prophesied the day and time of his death: The date, which was strictly fulfilled on May 15, 1812, the day that Methodius committed suicide by drinking a lethal dose of Laudanum. ----- Source: elespejogotico.blogspot.com.ar/ Voir toutes les images des clients Meilleures!valuations le plus rcent Meilleures!valuations Notices Utilisateur vous permet trouver les notices, manuels d'utilisation et les livres en formatPDF.
